It's not bad for a train station car park

I think the point the sage is making here, in the Buddhist tradition, is that one should bring one's attention to the essence of what is being reviewed; the carpark, and not what we'd like to say about the carpark.

What is immediately present, without embellishment?

When we let go of what we know about carparks in general, we are not attached to our preconceptions or our desires to appear knowledgeable.

Parked the car. Took the train.
It was there when I came back. Can't ask for more.

Michael Hamilton

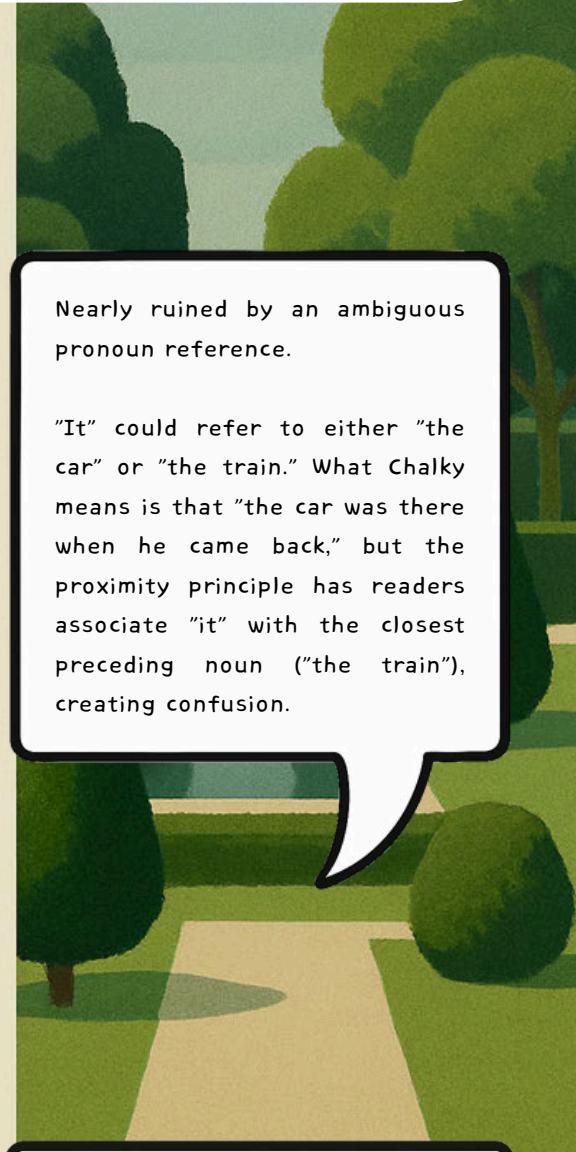

Local Guide 279 reviews

Fine for the moment.
No right turn out though.

Nearly ruined by an ambiguous pronoun reference.

"It" could refer to either "the car" or "the train." What Chalky means is that "the car was there when he came back," but the proximity principle has readers associate "it" with the closest preceding noun ("the train"), creating confusion.

It is a fact that you can't exit the carpark and turn right. However, knowing this is not useful, because you can't make other arrangements. Just turn right.

This is the same rotten, old, stinky, cramped, poorly designed carpark that's been sucking Perth dry for decades with its exorbitant prices for the one thing it offers: location.

After being stuck in the ticket lane for 10 minutes, then in the exit lane for 20, I decided I'd rather park in King's Park and walk into town.

Jennifer Grose

Best to go to the back parking spots, as most people grab the first ones they see.

Sure, walk from King's Park but it's still named after the same dude.

So I should drive past the empty spots to get to the ones at the back?

Wow.

Some of the best Vietnamese food I've ever had. Fresh, clean and generous serving sizes.

They seem to be open 7 days a week. I got talking to the owner and they are a hardworking, local family business.

Let's show support and eat out.

Prices are very reasonable and I can't recommend the food enough. We had various meals, duck with noodles, laksa, chicken satay etc. It was all very very very good.

You have not understood the premise of this restaurant.

Fair and reasonable. Not super cheap but affordable and was very tasty. Their beef is tender and tasty if that's your marker.

Indeed delicious food! And very generous proportions. The service could be better. The waitress doesn't talk at all.

P.S. They charge you for take-away container.

So the food was delicious and portions generous. But you rated them 4 stars. What did they charge you for the takeaway container? $100?

I normally go to Tra Vinh or Thanh Dat which are nearby for my Pho fix. Can Okay do better?

First up, the Pho broth is downright tasty, easily the equal of Thanh Dat and better than Tra Vinh. It is more beefy and rich but less sweet and less herby than Thanh Dat. It is much of a muchness which is better.

They are also the most generous restaurant in town when it comes to how much meat you find in your Pho. The meat is good quality, but it cannot beat the beef short rib in Thanh Dat.

"Much of a Muchness" would be a fabulous name for a restaurant! Top job Keith!

We had crispy chicken and fried rice, chicken laksa, spring rolls and deep fried ice cream. It was very tasty, not overly big on the deep fried ice cream but the novelty is cool. Great prices here, $42.00 for all of the above!

This restaurant is more than okay. Avocado smoothie was mixed with too much ice and I must say it was horrible. Some staff were neither friendly nor too annoying. Even so, my bean curd soup breakevened the cons.

AWGA is a small gallery by international standards. It's in the Northbridge Quarter, and unlike the WA Museum, is free.

The 2 special exhibitions were small but well worth an hour or so looking around.

This is a difficult review because I must emphasize the welcoming atmosphere, superb staff, modern facilities and free entrance. However, the art content, to my humble opinion, was of little substance.

Surprisingly, smaller than

The size is small. They had a number of interesting pieces here. I wanted more but they did not have the space.

The thing art and museum reviewers talk about most is size. Much more so than the art or exhibitions. But people don't say, 'good movie; it should have been longer', or 'great painting; if only it were 20% larger.'

This is one of Melbourne's hidden gems. I didn't expect to find a museum-shop like this in the CBD. As the store slogan says: "Scientific Curiosities, Artefacts & Ephemera".

Dissected insects and animals, from tarantulas, butterflies, scorpions, bats, foxes, deers, rabbits...

Scientific stuff and curiosities like sand clocks, mechanic planetary devices, microscopes, magnifying lenses, even the thermic machines of perpetual movement.

Minerals and gems; even meteorites.

Extremely disappointing. Can see why the tickets were free. There was nothing to see other than construction. So many dead ends. The paths often blocked or so small you had to wait for others to let you pass. Many enclosures shut.

There was not enough seating at the cafes. Very overpriced food, drinks, ice creams etc and the "hot" food was just prepared and waiting in a heater. When we finally reached this gate, we found it locked. We tried calling the emergency line, but the signal was so poor that the operator couldn't hear us. We had to walk another 25 minutes across the island in the heavy rain to reach the gate where we had entered.

Please specify which gates are accessible! It was very frustrating to find gates locked when trying to exit, especially in bad weather.

Yeah, but if you called it Sea Gull Island nobody would pay $27 to visit.

Penguins are BIRDS. Listen, just because it's called Penguin Island doesn't mean it contains penguins. It's OWNED by penguins. In winter they go to Bali to escape the cold.

For someone whose first language isn't English, they should take the time to explain things slowly and calmly, but that was far from the case they just kept on saying I am gonna lose my mind.

I bought a portable blender in New Zealand. When I flew to Thailand I had to transit in Perth.

In Auckland they told me to keep the mixer in my handbag because the blade is not too long and ofc they needed the battery (which was connected to the blade - you couldn't remove it!) in the hand bag as well.

In Perth they got rid of the motorbase, without any kind of solution. I am devastated.

I could have at least put it in my checked in luggage. His name was Maximilian and he will not be forgotten.

Ruthless staff.

Wasn't it a GREAT IDEA buying this book? 'His name is Maximilian and he will not be forgotten'. I am overcome. But wait! The airport reply to her complaint...

Hi Emma, we are sorry to hear about Maximilian. Please note that dangerous goods regulations are set by the Civil Aviation Safety Authority and adhered to by our security staff. I think Wittgenstein is interesting here. If self-understanding is not a private mental experience, it develops through public interaction. That creates space for genuine self-discovery; in a bingo hall, for example.

Wittgenstein himself didn't specifically mention bingo, but it became popular in his lifetime, so he was probably influenced by it.

Sometimes the conflicting standards also apply to the stupidest of things: Did a strut pressure test by pulling on the prop for example, they told me not to because it would "damage the engine".

I told them that if that damaged the engine, I wouldn't fly the plane because it would have serious problems if it couldn't even tolerate that.

I had such a great time at Woolworths in Balcatta! It was one of those trips where I was genuinely excited to explore the store. I ended up finding everything I needed without going overboard. The staff was super helpful, and I loved how well-arranged everything was. Woolworths has definitely become my top choice for stress-free and satisfying grocery shopping.

I got what I needed. Staff very friendly. Security Guard very friendly and tried his best to help me but directed me to staff when he couldn't help.

Mostly it speaks to the fact that you've confused a department store with the whole of Fremantle.

5 star review for beyond-call-of-duty service. I was served by Linda, and I wish to give her a shout-out with regard to the extra assistance she gave to the customer ahead of me.

He was in a mobility scooter and not very coordinated. Linda took the trouble to come around to help him lift items for scanning, and was very patient with him, despite his grumpiness. He'd even dropped 5c and she took the trouble to search for it and retrieve it for him, again, with not much gratitude from him.

Such customer service is lacking in supermarket shopping and I commend her accordingly.
